What is Exodus Swap?

You can swap one crypto for another using the in-app swap in Exodus.

Swap services are available through third-party API providers.

Your crypto is sent from your self-custody Exodus wallet to a third-party swap API provider, which then sends your new crypto back.

If you're looking for a DEX to swap your tokens, you can find one for supported networks in Exodus Web3 Wallet: How do I swap crypto in Web3 Wallet?

Which assets are available to swap in Exodus?

You can see all assets that are supported in Exodus here: Status.

Assets that are available to swap will have a green checkmark in the Swap column.

The screenshot shows the Exodus Status page with a list of supported cryptocurrency assets. The table has columns for Index, Digital Asset, APY Rewards, Support (Mobile, Desktop, Trezor, Web3), Swap Status (Swap, Details), and a Help button. The Swap column is highlighted with a pink border. Assets listed include Bitcoin, Lightning Network, Ethereum, Frapped USDT, Tether USD, Tether USD (USDT.e), BNB, USD Coin, and XRP.

How much crypto can I swap?

There are a lot of assets available to swap in Exodus. However, it's important to note that there is a minimum amount and a maximum amount you can swap.

Third-party swap API providers set floating minimums and maximums on their orders so that they can be sure all customers will be able to make their swaps.

These limits are determined according to several factors such as the liquidity of the assets you want to swap, as well as market conditions at the time of the swap.

However, there is no limit on the number of times you can swap. You can do as many maximum swaps as you would like.
